Our dispatches give rather a fare, review of Granville's foreign poncy. It is said by the Times that Granville has the pest of the argument and De Giers the best practical results. This may be true, but it is best to walt for confirmation. The war party in England made cemands that were absure. Some of these demands were ignored, and in these respects the Russians may have the pest of it. But is not fair to say this except from a jingo standpoint. For example the jingo party has demanded an Afghan frontier that the Afghans do not want and it would sooner or ater result in an English-Afghan war to compe the attento protect and defend what t coesn't recognize as its own.

There is a good deal of harsh criticism of Secretary Whitney because he dic not accept the John until it was proven sha fu filled the contract conditions. Low Loaca fina y proved that le had fulfilled the contract and will get his money. This is right. The treatment of Mr. Roach by Mr. Wni.ney was fair and just. The ship was tried and cic not come up to the conditions. Notwin standing this Mr. Roach demandic his pay and the extreme protection press concurred in the cemand. Ar. Whitney eet inec. but offered, to give the soip another tran. Mr. Roaca blustered a good dea about it, but to no purpose, he had no right to as pay and he secretary of the navy had no right, to pay him. The issue simply was whether Mr. Roach should be held to his contract. Mr. Loach's: frience sale not. This was the real issue and in it Air. toac i was beaten.

The history of government is both unteresting and instructive; interesting because it is so closely interwoven with the progress and (eve obment of the human race as to afford ample compensation for the labor and time spent in its study, instruct ve because to the statesman and ciplomat i curnishes the know edge necessary for their guidance in governing the nations of the work. We of he pineteenth century possessing such 10uncant facilities for research and investigation can race the history of government through the successive genera ons of mantine. We can obow it throught be various forms and characters which it has assumed. we can mark its progressive strices as well as is apparent retrogressions. As we trace the ustory of government from its earliest am simplest torms to its more complex manifes ations in modern times we cannot far to notice transfer to searging end tar, epiton been contemporaneous with land rependent upon the ceve obment of man's intellectual auc mora nature. An age c slinguis iec. by great inte lectual and mora deve opment 14 a so characterized by a corresponding development in the sphere of government. Go back to the earliest period of nan's existence, and by the banks of the Euphrates and the lights you will find the stindest as we as the most primitive orm of government adapted to man soriginal state. Man, then of a numacic and migratory c sposition, needec but a simple form of gove ament o cirect and control his actions. the patriarchal form met his cemands and satisfied the necessities of his environment. As men advanced in the scale of intellectua and mora de ve obment government corresponding y ac skincec. 'Lie patriarch gave way to the ibac of the cribe, and the head of the tribe was that y succeeded by the king The Lorma t on of nationalities with their varying lan guages, natural surroundings and mental eucomments gave rise to a civersity in the form of government, and from this on government crases to be uniform in character.

the progress of government has not been uniform or continuous, indeed it has been exactly the reverse. One age is distinguished or the rule of the sovereign damos, another by that of the thirty tyrants. One age four ishes under the republic of a Cheionaltus. another is cobased by the sway of a Domitian sut notwithstanding all tuse seeming antitheses, notwitt stability all these apply ent retrigre -- lone, and much law steadill advanced until at the present time we see in the Amarican republic the larghest degree of perfection which it has attimed Government as here manifested accompaishes more also than elsewhere the purposes of its existence, han under our system cease to be a creature of the state, he becomes a sovereign. Le ce ises to exist for the state but the state exists to aid in inthe attainment of the ofty ency for which lewas created. Ours is essentially an individnalistic system, for under it no distinction is more as to 'race color or previous condition. of servitude ' the practical recognition of the equality and brotherhood of man is the great aim of our nation; government A government like our own composed of 1) dividua's each standing in the same relation to the centra authority, must of necessity be o'an intricate and complex character. his is owing to the difference in mail's aispost tions, temperaments and in electual powers This complexity is further increased and intensibed in the American government by the composite character of its population and the extent of territory under its control. For where there is a population composed of many cull erent nationa ities, and cistinguish ed by a civer-sity in postica, and religious beliefs, this extremely criticular and almost impossible to cevise a system of government which could adapt the to the needs and demands of such a population, without being intricate and complex And I, s further in possible lat the form of so complex a system could be refinitely and permanent y fixed. there must necessarily arise from time to time problems affecting its application, and questions to ating to the limit and scope of its various functions. So white we claim for our system a degree of perfection witch we are not willing to accord to other systems, yet we are compelled to acknowledge that our system of government has now attained the degree of efficiency which the character of our population cemands, and the cevelopmen, of our national powers recuires.
